Directory of Hospital Personnel

“...it is important to note that one of the strengths of this directory is that it includes facility statistics, certification, type of hospital, specialties offered, educational and purchasing affiliations, and accepted insurance plans...The primary purpose and major strength of this resource is the lists of key personnel involved in hospital administration...Ease of use of the Directory of Hospital Personnel gives it a strong advantage over other similar resources such as the American Hospital Association’s AHA Guide, which uses a complicated coding system to display hospital data...Overall, this is a useful guide to hospitals by state and city and includes information that would be helpful to physicians, nurses, insurance companies, referring agencies, and to the general public. This directory is intended primarily for hospital libraries but would also be appropriate for public and academic libraries, community health centers, and individual medical practices.”

“This comprehensive reference work profiles...hospitals in the US, including...key hospital personnel. It provides three indexes...The “Key Personnel” section lists up to 70 employees per hospital, usually in departments considered most important by patients. The “Directory” (also available in a customized database format) lists hospitals first by state, then alphabetically by city, finally by hospital name. Entries contain data about certification, specialty, statistics, type, educational and purchasing affiliations, and insurance plans, and give e-mail and web site addresses. The “User Guide” and “User Key” give straightforward directions on how to read and interpret the directories. Summing Up: Recommended. Health Science Center and Medical Libraries.”

“This newly revised directory, now listing new organizations, mergers, and acquisitions in the fickle health industry, profiles...hospitals and includes...key decision makers...Organized first by state and then alphabetically by city and hospital name, the listings provide names and titles of personnel, arranged first by top administrators, then alphabetically by title... as user-friendly and thorough as personnel directories get.”
